

Overall Impression

This is a noticeably stronger letter than the last one — and it's stronger in exactly the way the storytelling lesson predicts. You led with the fruit this time, you built a real arc, and you paid off the teaser from the last email. If anyone doubted the "communication, not fundraising" thesis, this is the proof.

What's working well

- You led with the win. "6 Salvations Through Storying" up top, the Nepali man receiving Christ in the first lines — the destination is no longer in the trunk.
- The arc carries. NYC in January, the dinner in Kuala Lumpur, Kathmandu in June — it reads like a story with momentum, not a status report.
- That dinner quote is the heart of it: "I think the barrier... is too high for people to create oral stories in their language." Letting the reader overhear the moment the idea was born is far better than summarizing it.
- It pays off last month's teaser — the "at least 1 in Nepal" became four, plus two in Myanmar. That follow-through is what turns a list of updates into a relationship.

The one thing

This letter is bursting with prayer-worthy momentum and doesn't ask for a single prayer. You've got perfect hooks sitting right there — the trainees committed to sharing the stories 120 times in 120 days, the Burmese training in September, the translation-verification work ahead. Right now your supporters can celebrate but they can't partner. Add two or three specific requests and you convert excitement into intercession, which is the whole point.

Worth considering

- Your subject promises "6," but the body makes the reader do the math (2 Burmese + 4 Nepali). Say the total plainly somewhere so the six land as six.
 - A couple of terms — "Storying" and "4 Fields" — carry a lot of weight undefined. A half-sentence gloss on "Storying" especially, since it's the engine of the whole email.

The detailed pass

Subject line + preview text

-  Subject — "6 Salvations Through Storying" is specific, concrete, and a clear number. Strong.
-  Preview text — set, and it extends rather than repeats. Big improvement over last time. (If you want it tighter: "How four people in one valley met Jesus this month.")

Storytelling

-  Lead is up front — the buried-lead problem from last email is fixed.
-  Clear arc across three cities, with dates anchoring it.
-  A genuine quote doing real work (the dinner conversation).
-  That dinner quote is one long block — breaking it into two shorter beats would read easier on a phone.
-  The "6" isn't reconciled in the text; help the reader count to it.

Text & readability

-  You define the tricky ones well — "vibe-coding" gets a plain-English translation, "unreached people groups" is spelled out.
-  "Storying" (capital S) is a term of art used throughout without a definition — a one-line gloss early would carry the whole letter.
-  "4 Fields" is insider shorthand; either a few words of context or cut it.
-  The literacy stat reads a little tangled — "about 1/3 of UPGs have under 20% literacy... that means 80% can't read" mixes two figures. Tighten so the one number you want them to feel stands alone.

Images (can't see them this run — assessing strategy from your captions, not the actual pictures)

-  Strategy looks right: a relevant image for nearly every section — the Nepali man, the field report, the storyboards, the NYC dinner, the app.
-  For an actual visual pass (corners, sizing, layout), I'd need a screenshot like last time — the `.eml` doesn't carry the photos.

Prayer requests & praises

-  No prayer requests at all, despite abundant material. Add specific ones: the 120-stories-in-120-days commitment, the September Burmese training, the translation-verification process.
-  No distinct praise callout either — the salvations are the praise, but a short "Praise God:" line would let supporters celebrate deliberately, not just in passing.

Formatting (limited without the render)

-  Structure reads as single-column and sectioned.
-  It's a long letter — earns most of its length, but the future-vision section is where some readers may drop; tightening the tangential outbound links (ElevenLabs, the "what is vibe-coding" link) keeps attention on your story.

Giving / call-to-action

-  No donation ask — right for this letter. Your CTA is "test the app," which is appropriate.
-  The app link shows up at the very top and mid-letter; make sure the one true CTA button is the obvious one so the early text links don't steal the click.

Typos & grammar

- "there's now been 4 people" → there have now been 4 people
- "Here's a few pictures" → Here are a few pictures
- "the barrier for entry is too high" → the barrier to entry is too high
- "back story" → backstory
- Minor: you switch between "Storying" and "storying" — pick one and stay consistent.

You clearly applied Lesson 2 here, and it shows. Add the prayer requests and this goes from a great praise report to a great partnership letter.
